JACKIE DAW IN MIDGETVILLE

Drawings by Leslie Elton

Story by Hal Cochran

"And now we will visit the Ferris wheel," shouted a midget. Jack helped the little men on board and gave the wheel a start. "Don't use up your electricity," he said, "I'll turn the wheel for you." Round and round it went, and as the cars reached the top the midgets waved to Jack.

"Have you had enough of this?" asked Jack, after a short time. "Sure!" shouted the midgets. "Now let's ride the shoot-the-chutes." And Jack led the way to the water slide. He stood at the edge of the little tank and watched the boats glide in. Water splashed up on his stockings.

As the last boat made a tiny spray of water, Jack looked down a small street and saw long rows of houses. "What a town!" he asked. "Why, that's Midgetville," replied one of the men. "You see, we have our play park right close to our town. We'll go to town now." (Continued.)

Conference of Allied Leaders Is Dissolved After Failure to Solve Question Reparations

No Vote on Proposals Was Taken at Meeting as Expressions of Delegates Made it Clear That Ballotting Was Not Necessary.

Paris, Jan. 4 (Bulletin).—The conference of allied leaders which has been endeavoring for the past three days to find a common plan for solution of the German reparations problem, was amicably dissolved today with the British delegates in disagreement with the representatives of France, Italy and Belgium on the question of how to deal with Germany in this connection.

The British delegation will leave for London tomorrow. The representatives of France and Belgium will continue to exchange views as to what measures should be taken jointly, and will issue a collective note at the conclusion of their deliberations.

The members of the French delegation insist that no rupture of the entente cordiale is involved, there being merely a friendly difference of opinion on the question of reparations.

No vote was taken, the French say, the expressions of the various delegates making it clear that ballotting was unnecessary. A formal statement by Premier Boner Law just before the conference broke up said that the British considered that the French proposals, if put into effect, were likely to bring disastrous results to Europe's economic life. At the same time, France was assured that the British government and it was believed, the British people, retained unchanged their feeling of friendship for France.

Premier Poincaré, in reply, said prolonged study of the British proposals had increased the French conviction that they meant the overthrow of the treaty of Versailles as well as a considerable reduction of the debt due to France, which could not accept them. M. Poincaré expressed thanks for the friendly statement of the British, and declared the feeling of France and her people towards Great Britain remained unchangeably cordial.

"It is an amicable rupture," said a member of the British delegation as he was leaving the conference.

"We are going home tomorrow morning," France goes ahead without us."

Gave An Ultimatum.

At the speaker's meeting, Premier Poincaré said that he had given the British an ultimatum to say yes or no to the French reparations proposition or else dissolution of the conference, according to a British delegate.

Italians With French.

The French were joined by the late arrival of the Italians who had been waiting at the hotel for a telegram sent to Premier Boner Law.

The reply instructed the Italian delegate to reject the British reparations plan.

The British delegates met M. Boner Law this morning in what was described as a final effort to see if it was possible to reconcile the French and British plans and prevent a breakdown of the conference this afternoon. The meeting resulted in the conclusion that the two sides were as far apart as in the conference and that it was impossible to bring the divergent views together in any way.

It also is believed that the definite New York, Jan. 4.—Building head, chairman of the British exchequer, and the British delegation to the United States were taken off the storm-tossed Niagara at approximately this morning and shaking the revenue cutter Niagara. They were taken to New York to see if they could get an early trip for the Italian.

TWO MEN LOSE LIVES IN FIRE AT CAPREOL, ONT.

Canadian National Railway Despatcher and Edward Morris of Ottawa Burned to Death

Capreol, Ont., Jan. 4.—E. R. Leach, Canadian National railway despatcher, and Edward Morris, of Ottawa, were burned to death and part of the main business section of Capreol was destroyed when fire visited this point northwest of here, early today.

It is understood that the fire started in a rooming house, possibly from an overheated stove, and spread to a building which was a main business section of the town. A large number of houses, including a hotel, were destroyed, and the fire spread to a large block in the heart of the town. Morris was trapped in an apartment above the pool room.

The place was swept by a fire some fourteen months ago, when over 140 houses were destroyed.

Fire fighting protection today was afforded by a volunteer brigade and downtown buildings were being reconstructed. No later than last week a local insurance man predicted that the town would be the scene of a bad fire before the end of the winter.

Actual figures as to the extent of the damage are not available, but it is understood that the value of the property affected will be in the neighborhood of $50,000 at least.

WILL PORTRAY THE STORMING OF FORT EDMONTON

Scene Will Be Depicted By the Hudson's Bay Co. at Winter Carnival

An interesting feature of the forthcoming winter carnival will be the scene which is being arranged by the Hudson Bay Company to be given Thursday evening in the Arena depicting the storming of Fort Edmonton in 1858 by the Blackfoot Indians.

A number of the Blackfeet are being brought to Edmonton to put on the number, which depicts an event that actually took place in 1858 when a wandering band of Cree were driven across the Saskatchewan by the Blackfeet, and were forced to take shelter within the stockades of Fort Edmonton.

The Hudson Bay company threw open the gates to admit the Cree, and they were no sooner closed than the Blackfeet appeared and attempted to climb the stockades. The factor in charge of the Fort mounted a battery and through the medium of an interpreter, held a council with the Blackfeet, which was the means of quelling the contact trial war between the two tribes. A truce was thereby brought about which was lasting in its effect.

No effort is being spared by the Hudson Bay company to make this one of the finest events of the carnival.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5, 1923

WHAT FOLLOWS?

The Paris conference has ended as the London conference ended, and as so many other international assemblies have ended in Europe during the last four years. With this difference, that each breakdown of the kind has left the Allies more hopelessly estranged. While the delegates were careful to announce that they parted in unity, there is no unity in the fact that the Allied powers stand farther apart today than they have at any time since they joined forces against the common foe. Their governments, and the official relationships of a year ago but the attitude of governments does not altogether nor chiefly make or mar the solidarity of such a combination of self-governing peoples. Public opinion is the ruling force in democratic states, and the factor that makes and unites international alliances. While the allied statesmen have been trying to hold the combination together, the people behind them have been obviously drifting apart. There has been evidence in fact of a well-engineered conspiracy to break up the entire combination of the great British and French, by propaganda given publicity in some of the most widely read newspapers of either country. Whether that has been the case, and whatever the effect may have been, there is no disputing the fact that the channel does not today separate the two countries more certainly than that they do not share a disposition to act together for the common interests which they hold in common, and can probably only protect by joint action.

Whether or not German intrigue had anything to do with splitting the solid front of the split, and Germany is the gainer. The Allies have not only ceased to co-operate; they have ceased to pretend to be able to do so. Germany is told plainly that it has won France and perhaps Italy and Belgium, to deal with if forcible measures are attempted to compel the payment of the reparations claims. Britain is out of it so far as the occupation of more German territory is concerned or other present efforts to bring Berlin to terms.

What will follow is for the future to disclose. There is not even the basis for a confident guess. The French Government has declared that that country will act if it has to act alone. How, and when, and what will Germany do? These are the questions thrust into the foreground by the break-up at Paris.

Unwelcome as the thought is, it is just as well to realize that Europe may be on the verge of another war; perhaps confined to France and Germany, and perhaps forced to draw the surrounding nations again into conflict. Against that possibility the strongest ground for hope lies in the unpardonable of Germany. If the Allies have conferred the powers taken by them in the treaty of Versailles Germany should now be unable to resist even France alone. If they have not stripped the country bare of armament and munitions it is assuming a good deal to suppose that the high-spirited German people will submit to further humiliation at the hands of their ancient enemy.

It is in order to recall now that the fact of defeat was never brought home to a clearly the public mind in Germany as it was to the people of the Allied countries. To the outside world it was apparent enough that the military power of Germany was hopelessly beaten and broken beyond repair. But Allied troops did not make a triumphant march through German territory and posture terms of peace in Berlin, nor were there other striking means taken to impress upon the people of Germany that they were at the end of the road and that thoughts of evading the consequences of ever evading the score might as well be abandoned as hopeless. A good many observers whose opinions are worth paying attention to during the last four years that the German people did not realize that they had been actually and decisively beaten. They knew that they had failed in the objective of 1914; but a campaign may be lost and the disaster reversed in another way.

That France will take action to enforce its demands is to be supposed; it cannot well do else without losing prestige and weakening the force of future claims. Whether Germany will submit or resist is the unknown element in the calculation. And if the German people are what they have been in the past the answer to that depends perhaps more on whether they have the weapons to fight with than on whether they have the spirit to fight. If history means anything there will be war when the French troops advance, unless Germany has been left so completely unarmed that resistance would be self-inflicted suicidal. If France acts alone where does Britain come in?

when the settlement is made? If France collects on Britain's claims against Germany take second place. That surely would be a curious position for the country that financed France and the other Allies through the great struggle. But if Germany resists and resists successfully, what chance does Britain would ever get a cent out of victorious Berlin?

Meantime Wilhelm is at Doorn, pining to be emperor again, and his friends in Germany are both numerous, influential and active. Nothing could create a more favorable atmosphere for the restoration of the old regime than a French war of aggression against Germany.

These are speculations of course, but Europe is a field in which political futurists of frightful conceits, and makers of world-wide concern.

A NEW JOB FOR WILLIE

Wilhelm collected ten thousand dollars for the picture rights of his wedding. Perhaps he would give back the money to fund the ceremony. At last reports his new spouse was chasing his military friends out of Doorn and teaching the ex-All Highest to go shopping with her and carry the parcels.

CONDITIONS IMPROVE

Calgary reports are that drunkenness in that city is decreasing, the police having picked up only 19 celebrants during December. The same tendency is observable in Edmonton, and in other cities. Whether because of better enforcement of the law, or a scarcity of money, or both, an intoxicated person is seldom seen on the public streets.

BACK TO NORMAL

The grand-daughter of Garibaldi says the Fascist movement in Italy is a reaction from Bolshevism. Not much has been known of this continent about the nature and objects of the new party that has come into power at Rome, but this certificate of character will go far to commend it to the sympathy of the public. Any movement that is a reaction from Bolshevism must be in the direction of sanity, safety and stability. It may be added that the late Premier Mussolini has been active in international affairs, substantiating the claim that these are the things he stands for.

BEST OF ALL

The U.M.W.A. hunger strike did not last long. It began at noon, but ended promptly when supper was brought up. Perhaps it occurred to the abstemious ones that nobody but themselves was worrying about whether they ate or fasted. This is a free country; if a man doesn't want to eat he doesn't have to. One thing the public will not stand for is the forcible feeding of anybody. That would be a violation of individual rights and a waste of good food. If the strikers had any notion that they would acquire the status of "martyrs" by refusing to eat, they did well to try over it while they were able to sit up and help themselves.

A LITTLE BIT OF IRELAND

The Free State constitution at New York has been the scene of a small-scale reproduction of the conditions prevailing across the sea, with the exception that as yet nobody has been killed and the Irish have not been burned or bombed. Now the holders of the bonds which Mr. De Valera sold in the United States are beginning to drop in and ask if, when and by whom these are going to be paid. That adds a new element to the complications. If the Free State representative won't pay and the republican representatives can't, there is likely to be still more straining times. The foreign sale of securities of the Irish Republic will have trouble before he collects, but he is likely to make trouble around the consulate if he cannot collect.

CALLING FOR HELP

The threat emanating from the Calgary headquarters of the U.M.W.A. of a sympathetic industrial strike for the U.M.W.A. about the surrender of the Edmonton coal field to that organization is evidence that the attempt staged on December 18 has failed.

It is inconceivable that the employees of the skilled industries of Edmonton would attempt to force upon themselves and their fellow citizens a dictatorship, so unjust and tyrannical as that attempted by the U.M.W.A. But if evil counsels should prevail and the worst come to pass, both city and country need coal in January more urgently and immediately than any other product of industry. We can wait for or do without the products of very many forms of industry, but we must have coal. So long as mines keep going we can live, even if other industries cease for a time.

LEWIS AND RYAN SHOULD PROVIDE

A deputization that waited upon the mayor on Wednesday demanded that the city provide for the dependents of the members of the riotous mobs now in Fort Saskatchewan jail awaiting trial. The grounds for such a demand seem to be absolutely lacking. If the men were really striking workers they obviously could not have been working at the time of their arrest, and therefore could not have been providing for the support of their families by their labor. Whoever was providing that support, they were not. So far as the families are concerned they are no worse off with the men in jail than they would be with the men refusing work themselves and using violence to prevent other men from working. It would seem, indeed, that the dependents must have been depending on themselves and that the situation for them is relieved by the man of the family being provided for elsewhere and otherwise. If he were really a strike miner his family is saving the cost of his keep while he is in jail.

There is no doubt that the members of the mobs now under arrest were mercenaries of Ryan's red army, drawing regular pay and allowances for their pernicious activities from the organization of which John L. Lewis, author of the Herrin massacre, is the head. The men are where they are because they followed the orders of Ryan while they were under pay from those men. As Lewis and Ryan were taking care of the men and their dependents before they got into jail it is up to those worthies to take care of the dependents now that the province has relieved them of the burden of providing for the heads of the families.

UNCOMMON SENSE

INTEGRITY AN ASSET.

The late John Wanamaker made his own fortune. His capital was integrity. He began life with the idea of keeping it unimpaired for the eighty-four years of his life.

Mr. Wanamaker was a man of energy, of ideas, of high ability. He believed in the future.

He was not afraid to do things in a big way. To do them in a big way he needed money—money which, in the later years of his career, ran into millions.

Men who have money are careful with it. They take no chances to improve it. To plunger, gamble and speculate they refuse to lend.

But they were watching Mr. Wanamaker. And when he wanted money he got it. There were rival merchants who believed that he was going too far in his faith in the future.

They saw him expand constantly, till many acres of floor space were covered with his goods, and predicted that sooner or later the crash would come.

But the crash never came. For Mr. Wanamaker's real capital was integrity. His customers came to know him as well as the nation.

And the world outside came to know him too. It became an important factor in the national life.

As postmaster general under President Wilson he did more to improve the service, and to put the mails on a business basis, for as he was permitted by the postmaster general to make his own plans.

His life history is a lesson for every man in business. It is a lesson for every boy. There is much to be learned from the history of this man who achieved it by a combination of integrity, energy and hard work.

He was first of all a honest man. And he made honest men of those that served in his establishment and in the most important state of the U.S.A. He died on January 12, 1922, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.

Death of Mrs. Bell

Heard With Regret In Cape Breton

Byron, N.B., Jan. 4. (Canadian Press)—News of the death of Mrs. Bell, widow of Alexander Graham Bell, was received with sorrow by friends in Haddock and Cape Breton. It was in the little town of Haddock and Victoria, a country surrounding that of Mrs. Bell was last known. For nearly forty years she and her husband spent their lives in the quiet of each year on the Bell estate, called "Innis Arden" and while her husband lived himself with his industry and energy, she was a community social work on behalf of the people.

An old church which she purchased and turned into a modern circulating library will stand as a monument to her life and the welfare of her Canadian neighbors.

According to plans completed long before the death of Dr. Bell, a statue was to be erected on the summit of Mount Rogers, Montreal, to honor the memory of the inventor of the telephone and the inventor of the gramophone.

BARREN LANDS TRAPPER SAFE AT CHIPEWYAN

George Lee, prospector and trapper of the northland, is safe at Fort Chipewyan despite reports to the effect that he had perished in the barren lands. Lee, who is over fifty years of age, left Ft. Chipewyan in the summer for the country eastward of the Slave river post, his equipment consisted of a shotgun, ten days' food supply and a light paddling canoe. As he had not returned by the end of the summer, the men left for the northland, some of whom had been in the barren lands, knowing the man in the northland, thought there was a possibility of his winning through.

Word has now reached the city from the Athabasca lake post to the effect that Lee paddled his canoe into Chipewyan in his usual canoe, rather surprised that his absence should have been so long. The ten days' food, added to the supply of his gun, furnished him with adequate supplies, and as far as the trapper was concerned his adventures were no more thrilling than riding in a street car from Jasper avenue to the north side.

MAJOR WILL SPEAK

The speaker at the regular meeting of the board of trade, 12-13 Friday will be Mayor Duggan, who will give an address on "Close Cooperation between the Board of Trade and the City Council." A full attendance of members is anticipated, as the board has been in and forward to hearing the mayor for several weeks now.
